About the Authors

Cathy Benedict has been teaching music education graduate and undergraduate classes at New York University since 2000. She is currently Assistant Professor and Coordinator of Undergraduate Studies in Music Education. Her scholarly interests include the reciprocity of the teacher/student, student/teacher relationship and the difficulties in facilitating music education environments in which students engage in transformative processes that encourage a perspective of a justice-oriented citizen.

Patrick Schmidt is Associate Professor of Music Education at the Westminster Choir College of Rider University. He teaches courses in philosophy and sociology of music education, research, as well as music teaching at the secondary level. Dr. Schmidt's scholarly interests are connected to areas of urban education, critical pedagogies, and political/sociological/philosophical concepts in teaching and learning.
